

GAHAN THE GOOD LEARNER!

Gahan wasn't always a confident boy and would give up at any challenge – opening a tight ketchup bottle, throwing his controller when he lost a computer game and was forever saying "I can't do this" and giving up. If Gahan was honest with himself, he was scared of trying new things and didn't think he was very good at anything.

This all changed when Gahan said "I can't do this" for the very last time. Gahan threw his pencil down in a maths lesson - giving up on his work. He stormed out of class four's glass door before being blinded by a scarlet light.

The whole world slowed down, and Gahan felt a strange warmth surging from his toes to his head. Once the strange feeling passed, Gahan tried to make sense of what had happened before being drawn to a strange red stone on the ground. Gahan's fingers touched the glowing orb and the same warmth radiated around his body. It was confidence!

Clutching the stone tightly in his palm, Gahan turned around and headed toward his smiling teacher. From then on, Gahan would give anything and go and strived to do his best at everything. With his new found confidence, Gahan realised that being a good learner did not mean he would always be top of the class, but it actually meant that he tried his best and reached his full potential which filled him with happiness and pride. His good learner superpower helped Gahan rise to any challenge he faced, remain resilient and persevere at any encounter which came his way.

News soon spread about Gahan's good learning power, and he was asked to join Tiger Team to help spread confidence and resilience to children across the world!
